

Gabriel Padilla is Ph.D in Genetics of Microorganisms (1988, University of Leeds, England) and currently is Associate Professor at Department of Microbiology, Institute of Biomedical Sciences at University of São Paulo. He was Coordinator of the Inter-institutional Program of Biotechnology (1996-2000) between the University of São Paulo-Institute of Technological Research (IPT) and Institute Butanta. During 2007-2008 he was Visitor Lecturer at James Cook University at Townsville, Australia. Currently is Vice-Head of the Microbiology Department at USP. His research interests are focused in the study of polyketide biosynthetic genes of endophytic microorganisms and antitumoral compounds.